Context

Name of creator: Bonington | Sir Christian John Storey, CVO, CBE, DL

Administrative/Biographical history: Born in Hampstead on 6th August 1934, Chris Bonington was educated at University College School, London. He started climbing in 1951, while still at school, hitch hiking to Snowdonia and Scotland in his holidays.

He left school before Christmas 1952 to start his National Service in the RAF. Having applied and entered the Royal Air Force College, Cranwell to train as a pilot, he failed to fly solo, and so transferred to the Royal Military Academy, Sandhurst. During this time he climbed avidly in the British Isles and started putting up new routes particularly in the Avon Gorge. Here he was the first to open up the big Main Wall with Mercavity and Malbogies.

He was commissioned in the Royal Tank Regiment in 1956, spending three years in North Germany in command of a troop of tanks and then two years at the Army Outward Bound School as a mountaineering instructor. It was during this period that he started climbing in the Alps, making the first British ascent of the South West Pillar of the Drus in 1958 and that of the Brandler Hasse Route on the North Wall of the Cima Grande in the Dolomites in 1959.

In 1960, as a member of the Joint British-Indian-Nepalese Services Expedition he made the first ascent of Annapurna II (7937 metres.) with Captain Dick Grant MC of the Royal Marines and Corporal Ang Nyima Sherpa of the Brigade of Gurkhas.

In 1961 he left the army to join a civilian expedition to Nuptse (7,861 metres), the third peak of Everest, making the first ascent by its huge South Face. At the time this was one of the most challenging climbs to be completed in the Himalaya.

Chris travelled back overland to Chamonix to meet up with Don Whillans and they spent most of that summer sitting below the North Wall of the Eiger hoping to make an attempt, but poor conditions prevailed. At the end of August they moved back to Chamonix to make the first ascent of the Central Pillar of Freney on the south side of Mont Blanc with Ian Clough and Polish climber, Jan Djuglosz. Again it was one of the most difficult climbs in the Alps.

He had already started working as a Management Trainee with Unilever and joined them in September that year hoping to combine a conventional career with his love of mountaineering.

In 1962, he met Wendy, his wife to be, at a Twelfth Night Party and they married that May. When he was invited to join an expedition to the Central Tower of Paine in Southern Chile that Autumn his boss in Unilever told him he should decide what he should do with his life – get on with his career or go climbing. He chose the latter.

He left his job in July to spend the rest of the summer in the Alps, making the first British ascent of the North Wall of the Eiger with Ian Clough at the end of the summer.

Then in October it was off to Chile with Wendy and the climbing team. They laid siege to the Central Tower of Paine, were battered by the dread Patagonian winds, and found themselves in a race for the summit with an Italian expedition which arrived unexpectedly. Finally, Don Whillans and Chris made the first ascent on 16 January 1963.

On returning to England in the Spring of 1963, Chris and Wendy settled in the Lake District and Chris got down to writing his first book, "I Chose to Climb" and lecturing about his ascent of the Eiger.

He also spent the summers climbing in the Alps making first ascents, which included the Right-Hand Pillar of Brouillard on the South side of Mont Blanc, in 1965.

In 1966, back in the UK, he made the first ascent of The Old Man of Hoy with Tom Patey and Rusty Baillie and took part in the spectacular live televised broadcast of the climb in the following year.

Chris and Wendy's first child, Conrad was born in early 1964, but tragically lost his life in an accident in 1966. They had two more children, Daniel and Rupert born in 1967 and 1969 respectively.

His career as a photo-journalist had blossomed in early 1966 with his first assignment with the Daily Telegraph Magazine to cover an attempt to make the first ascent of a direct route up the North Wall of the Eiger by John Harlin, Dougal Haston and Layton Kor. Sadly John Harlin was killed when the fixed rope broke, but Dougal Haston succeeded in reaching the top with a group of Germans who were also on the climb.

Other assignments followed; going to Ecuador to climb and photograph Sangay, one of the most active volcanoes in the world, and to Baffin Island to hunt caribou with the Eskimos. His fast-developing career as an adventure journalist and photographer reached a climax in 1968 when he accompanied an Army Expedition, led by the then Captain John Blashford-Snell, in their first descent of the Blue Nile from Lake Tana to the Sudanese frontier. This involved shooting dangerous rapids, the threat of crocodiles and being shot at in an ambush. But he was missing the activity he loved and thoroughly understood, climbing and mountaineering.

In the autumn of 1968 Chris started planning an expedition to attempt the South Face of Annapurna. At this time no Himalayan wall on an 8,000 metre peak had been climbed and tackling this huge, 3,000 metre wall was a step into the unknown since it involved climbing steep rock and ice at heights of over 7,000 metres. Careful choice of team members, logistical planning and some very hard climbing was rewarded by success when Dougal Haston and Don Whillans reached the summit on 27th May, 1970. Tragically Ian Clough lost his life at the end of the expedition in an avalanche.

After the ascent of the South Face of Annapurna, the South West Face of Everest was a logical follow-up. In 1972 Chris made his first attempt but was defeated by the savage winds and intense cold of the autumn and winter. He learnt a great deal, however, from the experience.

At that time the Nepalese authorities only allowed one expedition at a time on the mountain and it was fully booked through to 1985, so Chris got on with other climbs. He made the first ascent of Brammah (6411m) in 1973 with Nick Estcourt and that of Changabang (6864m) in 1974 with Doug Scott, Dougal Haston, Martin Boysen, Balwant Sandhu and Tachei Sherpa.

When the opportunity came for a further attempt on the South West Face of Everest he took a team out in the autumn of 1975. Doug Scott and Dougal Haston reached the summit successfully on 24th September, though tragedy struck on the 2nd ascent by Peter Boardman and Pertemba Sherpa when Mick Burke was lost.

In 1977 Chris and Doug Scott made the first ascent of the Ogre (7,284 metres) in the Karakoram Himalaya and had an epic six-day descent, aided by Mo Anthoine and Clive Rowland. They went without food for five days and fought through a blizzard, with Doug Scott crawling all the way as he had broken both his legs soon after leaving the summit. Chris also had a fall and broke three ribs.

In 1978 Chris led a team of eight to attempt the previously unclimbed West Ridge of K2, which at 8,760m is the second highest mountain in the world. This ended when, tragically, Nick Estcourt was engulfed by a huge avalanche, which swept across their route.

There was then a break of two years spent researching and writing his book, Quest for Adventure, a study of post-war adventure in all its aspects.

In 1980 after China had re-opened some of their mountain areas to foreign mountaineers Chris, Dr. Michael Ward and Alan Rouse were among the first Europeans to go there, making a reconnaissance of Mount Kongur, a remote unclimbed mountain in Western Xinjiang. They returned again in 1981 for the successful ascent of the 7,704m peak accomplished by Chris, Peter Boardman, Joe Tasker and Alan Rouse.

In 1982 Chris, together with Peter Boardman, Joe Tasker and Dick Renshaw, attempted the unclimbed North East Ridge of Everest without oxygen. Dick Renshaw had to retire when he suffered a mild stroke (diagnosed by Charles Clarke, the expedition's doctor). The other three continued, but Chris decided that as he was moving so much slower than either Boardman or Tasker at high altitude, they should go for the top on their own. They both disappeared on the summit ridge on what Chris had described up to that moment as 'the happiest expedition any of us had been on'. He was deeply distressed by the loss of two such close friends, but he never thought of giving up climbing.

In 1983 he made the first ascent of the West Summit of Shivling (6501m) with Jim Fotheringham in the Gangotri Himalaya in India. They climbed alpine-style taking five days, up and down. A few weeks later he joined millionaire Frank Wells and Dick Bass on a fascinating expedition to Antarctica to climb Mount Vinson (4,897m), its highest peak in temperatures down to -35C and with winds of over 50 miles an hour.

In June 1984, together with Al Rouse and two Pakistani climbers, he attempted the unclimbed 7,500m Karun Koh in the Karakoram Himalaya, but was defeated by bad weather.

In 1985, Chris realised a life time's ambition when he reached the summit of Everest by the South Col route as a member of the Norwegian Everest Expedition led by Arne Naess.

There was no sense of anti-climax after his ascent of Everest, rather a sense of relief at getting it out of his system and getting on with the exploratory climbing that he loved. In 1987 and 1988 he led expeditions to Menlungtse, (7150 metres), at the time one of the most beautiful and technically difficult unclimbed peaks in the world. In 1988 the expedition made the first ascent of the West Peak of Menlungtse. In addition they searched for the legendary yeti and were accompanied by a BBC Natural History Unit film team who made a documentary of the search.

For two and a half years he was involved in the writing and production of a pictorial autobiography, Mountaineer, and a television series and book about the history of mountaineering The Climbers.

Then he joined forces with Robin Knox-Johnston and Jim Lowther, on an expedition to Greenland to give Chris and Jim the experience of sailing and Robin, that of climbing. They sailed from Whitehaven in 'Suhaili', the yacht in which Knox-Johnston had made the first non-stop, single-handed circumnavigation of the world, to the East Coast of Greenland which is guarded by dense pack ice. They then skied; pulling pulks, to the foot of the unclimbed, 2,660 metre Cathedral peak, in the remote Lemon Bjerge range, but did not succeed in climbing it.

In 1992 he led jointly with Harish Kapadia, an extremely successful Indian/British expedition to the remote Kumaon Himalaya in northern India. Several first ascents were made including the West Ridge of Panch Chuli II (6904m) by Chris and Graham Little.

In July 1993, he joined Jim Lowther, Graham Little and Rob Ferguson on a return expedition to the Lemon Bjerge range in Greenland, this time flying into the Chisel Glacier and making three first ascents, a mixed route on the Chisel and two technically challenging rock routes on the Ivory Tower and the Needle.

In August he visited the Russian Caucasus, climbing Mount Elbrus (5642m) , the highest peak in Europe and the demanding North East Ridge of Ushba.

In 1994 he returned to one of the little explored areas of northern India and, together with Harish Kapadia, led another joint Indian/British expedition. Their objective was Rangrik Rang an unclimbed peak of 6,553m in the upper reaches of the Tirung Gad in the Kinnaur Himalaya, a region previously unvisited by climbers. They succeeded in putting eight members of the team on the summit.

To celebrate the 10th Anniversary of the successful 1985 Norwegian Everest Expedition the original team came together again, this time to make the first ascent of Drangnag-Ri, a beautiful and steep 6,801m peak in the Rolwaling Himal, appropriately, in sight of Everest.

In 1996 Chris made a reconnaissance with Charles Clarke to North East Tibet to find the peak they had seen through a plane window on their way to Lhasa in 1982. They found their mountain (Sepu Kangri 6,950m) and in the Spring of 1997 made their first attempt to climb it. Jim Lowther, Jim Fotheringham, John Porter and Chris made up the climbing team, supported by Charles Clarke, Jim Curran (filming) and Duncan Sperry (Email and Internet technical support). This was the first time that Chris used satellite technology on an expedition to run a web site. The team were beaten by appalling weather and retreated having reached 6,100 metres on the North East Face of Sepu Kangri.

Chris returned there in the Autumn of 1998 with Victor Saunders, Graham Little, Elliot Robertson and Scott Muir (climbing team), Charles Clarke and a film crew comprising Jim Curran, Martin Belderson and Greg Cubitt from ITN. Clarke and Robertson had set out a month early and explored a fresh approach to the mountain from the east but the main party were once again beaten by the weather. This time the team approached the summit by the "Western Cwm" of the mountain, making two attempts. Victor Saunders and Scott Muir reached a height of 6800 metres, very close to the summit and Graham Little made the first ascent of the Turquoise Flower (6650m), an outlying peak of Sepu Kangri.

In Spring 2000 Chris had a family trip to the Kanchenjunga region in Nepal making the first ascent of Danga II (6190m) with his eldest son, Joe (Daniel), his brother Gerald and nephew James. Later that summer he climbed in South Greenland with Jim Lowther, Graham Little, John Porter, Mark Richey and Mark Wilford making several first ascents.

In 2001 he co-led an Indian, American, British expedition to the Arganglas range in Ladakh, N.W. India. He also made his first trip to the Taфраute region of Morocco to join a group of legendary rock climbing figures, including Joe Brown, Les Brown, Derek Walker and others who had been exploring and making new routes there over a period of twelve years. He has returned almost every year since.

In 2003, he joined Harish Kapadia and a group of Indian and British friends in an enjoyable trek and climb in Kullu. They met up again the following year in Lahoul, and in 2005 in Kumaon. He also climbed Kilimanjaro for a second time with a group of Pentland executives, (Pentland own Berghaus, of which Chris is non-executive Chairman) and made an attempt to sail once again into Kangelugsuaq to climb the Cathedral but this time was beaten by the pack ice.

In 2007 Chris joined Rob Ferguson, Graham Little and Jim Lowther on an expedition to unclimbed Sersank (6095m) in Lahoul, but due to appalling rock they failed to reach the top.

In March 2008 Barney Rosedale and he made a reconnaissance of the route to the Namun Bhanjyang (5560m), a high pass on an old trade route between Pokhara and Manang.

The following year his son Joe led his first commercial trek to the Everest Base Camp and Chris joined him as a guest.

Chris also climbed Mont Blanc by Mont Blanc de Tacul and Mont Maudit with Richard Cotter, Brand President of Berghaus, and Dave Cummins.

In 2010 he joined his son Joe once again on a trek to celebrate the 50th Anniversary of Chris's ascent of Annapurna II. The party included the son and grandson of Dick Grant, with whom Chris had made the first ascent. They visited the Base Camp and ended by crossing the Tilicho Pass which he had crossed with Sherpa Tachei all those years ago.

In 2011 he had an expedition with Charlie Clarke to the Sorang Valley in the Kinnaur range of the Indian Himalaya, making the first ascent of Ram Chukor Basera (5084m).

Context

Administrative/Biographical history:

The aim of the 1970 expedition was to climb Annapurna I (26,545 feet high) via the South face, a notoriously difficult and unconquered route. It was climbed using traditional siege-style tactics by establishing camps at varying altitudes and relying on fixed ropes. The Patrons of the expedition were Lord Tangle, Lord Hunt and Sir Charles Evans. George Greenfield was the Director of John Farquharson Ltd, Literary Agent. The summit was reached by Don Whillans and Dougal Haston at 14.30 on 27th May 1970. A second summit attempt by Tom Frost was unsuccessful. Tragically, Ian Clough lost his life in a serac avalanche on the 30th May which occurred below Camp II whilst the team prepared to evacuate the mountain. A TV documentary was produced by ITN for which Alan Hankinson was the reporter.

Full details of this expedition have been documented in a book entitled "Annapurna South Face", published by Cassel, 1971.

Context

Administrative/Biographical history:

The initial aim of the 1971 International Himalayan expedition was twofold; to climb Dhaulagiri II in 1970 thus using it as training exercise for an attempt on Mount Everest in 1971. The expedition leaders were Norman Dyhrenfurth, based in the USA and Lt Col Jimmy Roberts, based in Nepal. This was a result of two separate expeditions joining forces. Official permission to climb was granted on 2nd August 1969. The original proposal was later modified to concentrate solely on Mount Everest, but would attempt two routes simultaneously; one via the South West Face and the other by the West Ridge. Chris Bonington was invited to be climbing leader, but withdrew because of his doubts about the structure of the expedition and its outcome. There was much conflict during the course of the expedition, but, in spite of that, Don Whillans and Dougal Haston reached the foot of the Rock Band, although they were unable to climb it.

Context

Administrative/Biographical history: The Trango Tower (20,582 feet) is a monolithic rock tower situated above the Baltoro Glacier in West Pakistan. The expedition was to be the first technical rock climb in an Himalayan environment. The proposed team comprised Chris Bonington, Joe Brown, Hamish MacInnes, Martin Boysen, Paul Nunn and Will Barker. Unfortunately, the Pakistani High Commission refused permission to climb on 24th November 1971.

Context

Administrative/Biographical history: Chris Bonington accepted an invitation to join the 1972 German British Mount Everest expedition organised by Dr Herrligkoffer following refusal of permission for an expedition to climb the Trango Tower. The aim of the 1972 expedition was to ascend Mount Everest by the South West Face. Other invited British climbers were Dougal Haston and Don Whillans. Due to differences in respect of organisation and planning both Haston and Bonington withdrew their participation from this expedition. Hamish MacInnes and Doug Scott took their places. The expedition itself failed due to poor organisation, personality conflicts and deteriorating weather conditions.

Context

Administrative/Biographical history:

The original aim of the 1972 expedition was to climb Mount Everest via the South Col, as a small lightweight expedition without oxygen. The team was to be comprised of four climbers (Chris Bonington, Dougal Haston, Nick Estcourt, Mick Burke), two support members (Mike Thompson and Peter Steele, both of whom subsequently withdrew.) and six sherpas. However with the failure of the Herrligkoffer expedition, Bonington decided to try an all-out assault via the unclimbed South–West Face. This entailed an extremely tight schedule as the permission was for the post-monsoon season later that year. Doug Scott, Hamish MacInnes and Dave Bathgate were invited to join the original team as lead climbers. The support team was comprised of Col Jimmy Roberts (Deputy Leader and Base Camp Manager). Kelvin Kent, Graham Tiso, and Dr Barney Rosedale. Pembatharke was chief sirdar and Sona Hishy was administrative sirdar. Tony Tighe, an Australian friend of Haston's joined the expedition utilising his own resources.

The expedition was abandoned as it was impossible to establish Camp 6 due to deteriorating weather conditions. Tragically, Tony Tighe lost his life when an ice-tower in the Khumbu Icefall Section collapsed.

Full details of this expedition have been documented in a book entitled Everest South West Face (Hodder and Stoughton) 1973

Title: Mount Everest Expedition 1975

Date(s): 1973-1979

Level of description: Sub sub fonds

Extent: Five boxes

Context

Administrative/Biographical history:

The aim of the 1975 expedition was to climb Mount Everest via the South West face, a notoriously difficult and unconquered route.

The expedition team, comprised of eighteen British climbers, seventy eight sherpas, a transport manager, a four-man BBC film crew and a Sunday Times reporter. They departed Heathrow airport, London on 29th July 1975. Base Camp was sited at 18,000 feet on 21st August. On 20th September Nick Estcourt and Paul Braithwaite successfully scaled a notorious 1,000 foot Rock Band regarded as the major obstacle on the South West Face. Doug Scott and Dougal Haston established Camp 6 above the Rock Band at 27,200 feet on 22nd September, successfully reaching the summit (29,028 feet) at 6pm on 24th September 1975. The descent was marked by an overnight bivouac in a snowhole without oxygen or sleeping bags—the highest ever recorded. Tragically, two days later, Mick Burke disappeared whilst trying to reach the summit himself.

The expedition team arrived back in Kathmandu on 11th October and flew back to the UK on 17th October

Full details of this expedition have been documented in a book entitled “Everest: The Hard Way”, Hodder & Stoughton, 1976

A computer model (designed by Stephen Taylor, Comshare) was used to assist with this process and is in evidence by the extant computer print outs. Overland transportation was expedited by use of two 16 ton Ford D 1614 lorries hired from Godfrey Davies and adapted by Manchester Garages under the guidance of its Chairman, Bob Stoodley who was responsible for transportation with Ronnie Richards. Twenty two customs posts were crossed during this stage.

Title: The British Ogre Himalayan Expedition 1977

Date(s): 1975-1980

Level of description: Sub sub fonds

Extent: Three folders

Context

Administrative/Biographical history:

The British Ogre Himalayan Expedition 1977 was supported by The British Mountaineering Council and The Mount Everest Foundation. Lord Hunt of Llanvair Waterdine was its patron. Doug Scott initiated the expedition inviting Mo Anthoine, Chris Bonington, Paul Braithwaite, Dr. Charles Clarke (who stepped down for personal reasons), Dougal Haston (tragically killed in a ski-ing accident in January 1977 and replaced by Nick Estcourt) and Clive Rowland to join him. The Ogre, (23,900ft/7,285m) is located in the Karakorum Himalaya, Northern Pakistan. Following a successful first ascent by Scott and Bonington at 19.00 hours on 13th July 1977 the descent proved to be a seven day epic with Scott suffering from two broken legs, thus having to crawl back to Base Camp; Bonington cracked three ribs (resulting in pneumonia) and injured his left hand in another fall. The situation was exacerbated by a savage storm which lasted four days plus five days without food for the four expedition members (inc Anthoine & Rowlands) trying to get back to Base Camp.

Chris Bonington has published details about this expedition in the third volume of his autobiography "The Everest Years" (Hodder & Stoughton) 1986.

Context

Administrative/Biographical history

K2 (28,253 ft/8611m) located in the Karakorum of North Pakistan was attempted via the West Ridge with a small team of 8 climbers and 2 high altitude porters. Base camp was established on 02/06/1978. The expedition suffered an early tragedy when Nick Estcourt was killed in an avalanche whilst ferrying loads between Camp 1 and Camp 2 on 12/06/1978. The expedition was abandoned as a result of this. Lord John Hunt acted as patron.

Sponsorship of £25,000 was agreed by LRC International, Tony Robinson and Andy Hayman joined the team on the approach as representatives of LRC. Following the unsuccessful outcome, this amount was reduced to £10,000.

A film documentary was made by Chameleon Productions Ltd (Alan Jewitt and Chris Lister).

Context

Administrative/Biographical history

Mount Kongur (25,325ft/7719m) is located in Western Xinjiang, China. The expedition was preceded by a reconnaissance trip undertaken by Bonington, Rouse and Ward in 1980. The trip was initiated by the Mount Everest Foundation as the Chinese Mountaineering Association had only recently opened this area to foreigners.

Chris Bonington, was appointed Climbing Leader whilst Dr Michael Ward was Expedition Leader as the trip had two objectives, climbing and scientific. Out of a team of ten, only four, Bonington, together with Boardman, Rouse and Tasker made the first ascent in Alpine Style on 12th July 1981.

The expedition was organised by the Mount Everest Foundation. Sponsorship was provided by a large company with strong Chinese interests, namely Jardine Matheson & Co. Ltd of Hong Kong.

A different type of oxygen system was used as emergency back up on a trial-run basis. As it performed well, this system was subsequently used on the Mount Everest Expedition 1982.

A book was published about this expedition in 1982, Kongur: China's Elusive Summit (Hodder and Stoughton)

Context

Administrative/Biographical history

The objective of the 1982 expedition was to make an attempt via the unclimbed East North East ridge by a small six man team, comprising Peter Boardman, Chris Bonington, Dick Renshaw, Joseph Tasker and Dr Charles Clarke as Expedition Manager and Adrian Gordon as Base Camp Manager. The attempt was made without oxygen. The expedition also included a trekking party comprised of personnel connected with the expedition in a variety of positions and/or relationships. The expedition was funded by Jardine Matheson & Co Ltd Hong Kong. The expedition was halted following the disappearance of Peter Boardman and Joseph Tasker during an attempt in May 1982.

'Everest – The Unclimbed Ridge' by Chris Bonington and Charles Clarke was published by Hodder and Stoughton, 1983.

Context

Administrative/Biographical history

Chris Bonington was invited by Frank Wells and Dick Bass to join them on the "Seven Summits Odyssey", an undertaking to climb the highest peaks on each of the seven continents. The objective on Antarctica was Mount Vinson (16,860ft/5140m). A DC3 built in 1942, one of the few planes able to withstand the climatic conditions, was chartered and piloted by Giles Kershaw. The climbing team consisted of seven. In addition to those already named were Rick Ridgeway, Steve Matz, Yuichiro Miura and Taijairo Maeda.

The summit was reached by Bonington on 22nd November 1983 at 17.00. The other team members summited on 30th November.

Administrative/Biographical history

The expedition to St Kilda was a particularly sensitive one due to its vulnerable ecology. It was the first expedition to receive permission to climb since the late 1960's and undertook scientific analysis at the same time.

The aim was to climb the biggest unclimbed sea cliffs in Europe, namely Conachair (1,400ft), the N.W Face of Soay Island (1,350ft) and the W Face of Boreray (1,200ft). The climbs were reached by sea or from abseiling down.

Context

Administrative/Biographical history

There were two expeditions to Menlungtse (7175m) in 1987 and 1988. The first was a joint British/Norwegian one, whilst the second was an Anglo/American one. The initial expedition was funded by sponsorship by sixteen Norwegian banks, companies and organisations. The team entered Tibet via Nepal as regulations had eased thus allowing access by the main road linking Kathmandu with Lhasa. The approach involved a fast height gain which meant that three members of the party suffered from altitude sickness.

Base Camp was established in late March and an alpine-style push with three bivouacs took the team to 6400m. The high point was reached in the second week of April. The expedition was forced to retreat due to violent storms which continued throughout the year. Jim Fotheringham suffered a lightning strike, resulting in unconsciousness for a few seconds and the Norwegians' tent was destroyed.

Context

Administrative/Biographical history: There were two expeditions to Menlungtse (23,458ft) in 1987 and 1988. The first was a joint British/Norwegian one whilst the second was an Anglo/American one. Much press coverage was secured as the latter was referred to as being a "Search for the Yeti" expedition; Menlungtse was the mountain on which Eric Shipton had photographed supposed Yeti tracks in 1951. The expedition's purpose was twofold, to make a first ascent of Menlungtse and to find further evidence to prove existence of the yeti. The climbing team, comprised of six, was joined by a BBC Natural History Film Unit and a journalist with the "Mail on Sunday". The team attempted the West Ridge and reached 6700m, but retreated due to lack of acclimatisation. Alan Hinkes and Andy Fanshawe made a second attempt on 23rd May which saw them successfully reach the West summit.

Context

Administrative/Biographical history:

The expedition to Mount Everest in 1989 was to be the world's first attempt to fly over the summit of Everest in a hot air balloon. Unfortunately the attempt was aborted. The proposed team comprised a two man balloon crew with a further team of six responsible for filming, logistical support and recovery.

Team members included Sir Chris Bonington as climb leader and Per Lindstrom as balloonist. Other members were Hazeeb Zafar (Leader) and Waseem Mahmood (filming) and John Garb.

Context

Administrative/Biographical history:

A large multi-national expedition was planned to climb Everest via the North East Ridge which would be broadcast live. The Expedition fell through due to the success of an earlier expedition led by Brummie Stokes during the Summer of 1988 which solved the key problem of climbing the Pinnacles. Therefore the primary objective was no longer valid.

Context

Administrative/Biographical history:

Sepu Kangri (6950m) is located in the eastern section of the Nyain-Qen-Tenglha Shan (range) in north eastern Tibet. A reconnaissance expedition in 1996 saw the first Europeans in the area. The follow-up expedition in 1997 explored the area further and sought a route to the summit of Sepu Kangri. The '97 expedition failed in its objective due to the onset of bad weather.

The expedition in 1998 took place between August and October of that year. The team was divided into two separate groups. The climbing team was comprised of Bonington, Little, Lowther and Saunders and sought a route from the north as pursued in 1997. The expedition team was led by Dr Clarke and explored a route from the east. The expedition was able to reach a height greater than that previously reached, 6800m by Victor Saunders and Scott Muir, but was also curtailed due to deteriorating weather conditions.

A book documenting these expeditions was published in 1999: Tibet's Secret Mountain – the Triumph of Sepu Kangri

CBO/04/01 Family Letters Series, 5 folders

1940's-1980

Helen Bonington (1910-1998) had arranged letters by year, but it would appear that some letters have been taken out of sequence and put into different years. Therefore letters have been arranged in a chronological order where known, undated letters have been put into appropriate date order based on context and other undated items where date cannot be established have been placed at the end of the original 'year' they were filed in.

CBO/04/01/01 Various letters and postcards, some from Chris Bonington to his mother, Helen and others to either Chris or Helen from different correspondents. This series covered five decades of Lakeland climbing, from the 1940s to the 1980s. An important first ascent from each decade was re-climbed by one or more of the climbers who made the first ascent. The first programme showed Bill Peascod at the age of 65 repeating his first ascent of Eagle Front made in the June 1940 with Bonington seconding him. The second programme showed Whillans and Bonington climb Dovedale Groove, on Dove Crag – a Brown Whillans Route from May 1953 and into the 1980s. Bonington himself represented the 1960's with the first ascent of Holy Ghost in April 1965. For the 1970s, Bonington seconded Pete Livesey on Footless Crow, Goat Crag in Borrowdale, originally climbed April 1974. The 1980's was represented by two climbs. Pete Whillance and Dave Armstrong made the first ascent of Incantations, Tophet Wall on Great Gable in August 1984. Women's contributions were characterised by Jill Lawrence and Gill Price, both leading activists during the 1980s, climbing Empire on Raven Crag, Thirlmere also in August 1984. (May 1983-July 1985) 1 folder. MHT has a copy of this programme and the accompanying book.

Context

Administrative/Biographical history:

The British Mountaineering Council (BMC) was formed in December 1944 by Geoffrey Winthrop Young and Leo Amery to provide mountaineering advice to the wartime authorities and is the representative body that exists to protect the freedoms and promote the interests of climbers, hill walkers and mountaineers, including ski-mountaineers. It has several committees, known as specialist programmes which report on various activities to the BMC's Executive Committee who then agree practices which are actioned by BMC staff. Sir Chris Bonington was BMC President 1988-1991 and acted as vice president between 1976-1979 and 1985-1988. He has been a Patron since 1991.
